Course Overview

The Strategic Human Resources Management Training Course provides an in-depth understanding of strategic human resource management and its critical role in supporting organizational success. The programme focuses on the effective management of human capital while aligning HR strategies, policies, and practices with broader organizational objectives.

The course examines the evolution of modern human resource management and the relationship between strategic HR management and traditional personnel management. Participants will explore the primary activities, responsibilities, and systems of the HR function, together with the professional qualities, knowledge, and capabilities required for effective HR practice.

A major focus of the programme is the development and management of a capable and adaptable workforce. Participants will examine employee resourcing, recruitment and selection, assessment and development centres, aptitude testing and psychometrics, employee references, induction, compensation and benefits, total reward, and approaches to retaining employees.

The programme also addresses performance management within multicultural environments, appraisal systems, 360-degree feedback, employee problems, employee assistance programmes, employment law, equality of opportunity, diversity, workplace dignity, bullying and harassment, grievances, workplace investigations, mediation, exit procedures, and exit interviews.

In addition, participants will explore human resource planning, training and development, integrated HR strategies, HR ethics, professional conduct, and continuing professional development. Practical case studies and applied exercises will enable participants to strengthen their strategic perspective and apply effective HR practices within their organizations.
